A FORGOTTEN HERO.

A Wheeling Man Who Figured in the Battle of Lake Erle in 1813.

LIEUTENANT JOHN J. YARNALL

Who Was Commodore Perry's First Lieutenant in That Bloody Naval Engagement-Ilis Heroic Conduct. Nailed the Flag on the Lawrence. Manned His Own Guns After Every Man in His Command Was Killed, Though the Blood Plowed From His Many Wounds-Story of a Famous Sword-A Neglected Grave.

Written for the Intelligencer.

When Rip Van Winkle, after awaking from his long sleep of a score of years revisited the scenes of his earlier days and missed his old friends and intimate acquaintances and witnessed the changes which had occurred in well known places and familiar objects with which he had been so closely associated, he pathetically exclaimed: "Alas, how soon we are forgotten!"

This tendency upon the part of the living to forget the departed is strikingly illustrated in the cold neglect and caroless indifference manifested not alone in reference to the memory of in-dividuals, but also concerning the deeds and events which while living they were instrumental in accomplishing. Any one so disposed who will take the trouble to investigate our early local history cannot but admit the truthfulness of the foregoing remarks. The subject of this sketch is a case in point.

Here in Wheeling in the early years of the present century resided for a time one, whose name, fame and memory are now forgotten, or if remembered at all, by not more than one in a thousand, if if by that many. Lieutenant John Jolliffe Yarnall was a son of Mordecai Jollific Yarnall was a son of Mordecai Yarnall, and a grandson of Francis Yarnall. This last named person emigrated from the village of Claines in Worcestershire, England, and came to Pennsylvania and settled in the city of Philadelphia in the year 1684. About the year 1770-1, as nearly as can be ascortained, Mordecai Yarnall, the inther of Licutenant Yarnall, the subject of this paper, removed from Philadelphia to the town of Winchester in the valley of Virginia. The reports, which reached him there of the promising future of this western section of the country, induced him after a few years to remove duced him after a few years to remove to the then primitive town of Wheeling, where he located and remained until In the famous battle of Lake Erie,

In the famous battle of Lake Eric, which occurred on the 10th of September, 1813, between the Americans and British John J. Yarnall, who was Commodore Perry's first lieutenant, was a conspicuous figure and prominent actor. On that memorable and sanguinary occasion he won deserved distinct tion by the exhibition of unusual courtion by the exhibition of unusual cour-ageunder the most trying circumstances. When Perry was compelled by the dis-abled condition of his flagship, the Lawrence, to abandon her and transfer himself to the Niagara, he left Lieuten-ant Yarnall in command of the abandant tarnat in command of the aband-oned vessel with instructions that as soon as he hoisted his flag on the Niagara be was to haul down his flag on the Lawrence. This command he obeyed to the letter, but only to hoist obeyed to the letter, out only to noist it again and nail it to the most with his own hands, where it floated until the battle was ended. During this perilous feat, however, he did not escape unscathed, as the enemy made a target of him while so employed, for he received a severe wound in his face and his body was filled with a number of splintors.

a severe wound in his lace and his body was filled with a number of splinters which the enemy's fire had struck from the bulwarks and deek of the vessel.

A historian in giving an account of the battlesays: "He bound a red hand-kerchief around his neck and another around his head to staunch the blood which flowed from his wounds in a co-picts at gard over his nearon. A solice. which flowed from his wounds in a copious stream over his person. A splinter which passed through his nose caused that feature to swell to an enormous size, and gave to his countenance a most repulsive disfigurement. Although disfigured, wounded and covered with gore, he moved amid this scene of terrific carnage the very genius of courage and heroism. All the men in his command were killed; he asked Perry for more. They were given to him, only to share the inte of those first under his command. Again he asked the commodore for reinforcements, to be told, so great was the slaughter. be told, so great was the slaughter, there were no more that could be spared and he must get along by himself, and man his own guns." The historian further records as follows: "The dying who strewed the deck would turn their eyes in mute enquiry upon their youthin commander, as if to be assured that they had done their duty. The living, as a sweeping shot sent huge gaps in the ranks of their companions, looked a moment in his face to read its expres-sion, and then stepped quietly into the places left vacant by those who had fallen." ful commander, as if to be assured that

The combat lasted three hours, when the British having lost the most of their ships, struck their colors and the hard fought battle was won by the provess of the American seamen and American substituted in the batter. premacy was established on the lake. Commodore Perry, in announcing the victory to General Harrison, who was in command of the land forces of the Americans, wrote on a scrap of paper on his naval cap, which he dispatched to the general: "We have met the enemy, and they are ours."

In his dispatch to the secretary of the navy the cananadore wrote: "When I went aboard the Niagara I left the Lawrence in charge of Lieutonant John J. Yarnall, who, I was convinced from the bravery already displayed by him. J. Yarnall, who, I was convinced the bravery already displayed by Lawrence in clurge of Lieutenant John J. Yarnatil, who, I was convinced from the bravery already displayed by him, would do what would comport with the honor of the flag."

For his heroic conduct in this engagement three states conferred upon him testimonials of his valor commemorative of his services. The state of New York conterred upon him a gold medal appropriately inscribed. Pounsylvania presented him with a silver medal anitably inscribed and commending his bravery. Virginia, his native state, presented him with a costly sword in a silver scabbard, plated with gold, bearing the following inscription: "In lastinony of the undaunted gallantry of Lieutenant John Jolliffe Yarnali, of the United States ship Lawrence, under Commodore Porry, in the capture of the English fleet, the state of Virginia bostows this sword." These relies are still in the possession of Lieutenant Yarnali's descendants.

Mrs. Emily J. Ross in a late paper published by her gives the following incidents. She says: "During the late war the sword was won by General Kelley in several battles, having been loaned to him by Mr. Yarnali (a descendant of the lieutenant), who was pleased to have it used in the service of that country which had so highly honored his ancestor in its bestewal. Friends, however, fearing for the loss of so valuable a role, induced Mr. Yarnali to have it returned to him."

We further quote from this interesting writer: "Virginia during the civil war was like the old Graem's land—the debatable land between the north and the south, and was so constantly overrunt that no one left certain of roluing property or valuables of any discription. An old slave women devoted to the land who at the advanced to the land when the advanced to the land

An old slave women devoted to the family, and who at the advanced age of ninety-eight, still remains herself a relic of the regime, conceived the idea that those sacred mementoes were not that those sacred ingmentoes were not safe in the place where they were usually kept, and might be appropriated by marauding bands merely for the value of the unetal of which they were composed. Mary's master proposed depositing them in the safty vault of a bank, but with the authority no one laws hatter how to assume than these them. knew better how to assume than there old and devoted slave women of southold and devoted slave women of south-ern families, she said: No, banks might be robbed or burn down. She had cared for old massa's sword all her life and was still able to do so. One morning the sword and medal had disappeared too sword and medal had disappeared from their accustomed place, and for a time all was dismay and constornation as it was supposed they had been stolen. However, on being questioned, Mary told her master, that she had hidden them, but refused to tell where they had been secreted; nor did she do so will late access was alcelered when secreted.

until after peace was declared, when go-ing to the orchard, she dug them up from the roots of an apple tree." In the year 1815 Lieutenant Yarnall was detailed to accompany Commodore Decatur, who was sent out by the gov-ernment with instructions to chastise erament with instructions to chastise the pirates of the Barbary coast, who had committed heavy depredations upon our commerce in the waters of the Mediterranean, thus crippling our trade in the Orient. The expedition trade in the Orient. The expodition having proved successful, at its close, the commodore placed Yarnall in command of the man-of-war L'Epervier and confided to his keeping dispatches to the government. The vessel sailed for home but never reached the United States and from that day to this control of the States, and from that day to this no tidings have been heard of her. She is supposed to have foundered at sea, and all on board of her doubtless found a watery grave beneath the billows of the feet in height, of commanding presence, feet in height, of commanding presence, strong and muscular, inclined to be fleshy, and possessed a frank, open and intelligent countenance. There is a portrait of him in existence, now fin possession of the family of William Lippincott, of Philadelphia, which is said to be a faithful and correct likeness of him, and is the only one which has been preserved of this remarkable man.

Peter Yarnall, who will be recollected by some of our old citizens, the former proprietor and landlord of the old United States Hotel, which at one time occupied the site of the present Windsor Hotel, was a brother of our hero. Our city may well be proud of the record of this Wheeling boy, and ought to keep green the memory of his deeds and character. His father's remains were interred in the East Wheeling graveyard, which a civilized community has interred in the East Wheeling grave-yard, which a civilized community has permitted to be descerated, and to go to ruin and decay, and to become a public commons, where shattered and broken tombstones and sunken graves, over-grown with noxious weeds and vines, in silent, but eloquent voices evoke from the living, as they pass by, the ex-chamation: "What a shame," but washess an effort to graves the venical spirit which has visited with the besom of destruction the sacred spot where lie the romains of some of our worthiest and most respected citizens of the past, and over whose dust and ashes roam un restrained stray cattle, and where the vile and infamous in lawless indulgence viie and infanous in inview indulgence ply their nefarious games and indulge in their wild orgies.

The broken and dismantled tomb-stone of the father of the subject of this sketch has been removed from the spot where his ashes lie, and stands propped up in an alley on the west side of the yard, bearing this simple and unpretending

PUDDIERS WILL STRIKE

Unless the Manufacturers Withdraw the Offer of a Reduction.

Pittshundit, March 26.—The conferonce on the proposition of the Ohio Valley manufacturers to pay only $3 50 per ton for puddling and a general reduction of 15 per cent in the finishing department will be held on Saturday, President Garland, of the Amalgamated Association, declined to express an opinion as to the result of the meeting. The lodges of the association have voted against the acceptance of the sweeping reductions, and it is probable the cut will be refused. Unless the manufacturers withdraw the offer, a strike is likely to be declared in the Shenango and Mahoning Valleys, and fully 10,000 man will be idle. men will be idle.
